Key Observations

- British Columbia has many inclusive travel experiences, however there is no comprehensive source of information curated to make trip planning easy.
- Over 22% of Canadians, over the age of 15, have a disability (physical, cognitive or sensory); this number will grow as our population ages. Thus, a large segment of society is challenged to experience the transformative power of travel (Source: Statistics Canada)
- Research shows that travellers with accessibility challenges have additional and more complex information needs, at all stages of the journey, and the lack of access to this information is the biggest barrier to travel.
- Private sector accessible travel services exist in BC (largely outbound) which can be leveraged (Travel for All).
- Platforms, such as Airbnb, Google Maps and others, are beginning to add more accessibility information.
- Limited tools, training and resources are available for tourism businesses to create inclusive experiences.
- While there are many organizations and advocacy groups in BC that promote greater inclusivity, BC does not have a standalone entity for inclusive travel such as Keroul (Quebec) or Tourism for All (UK).
- The BC Provincial Government is championing improving the lives of people with disabilities. The ability to travel is an important element of life quality and is recognized in the Strategic Framework for Tourism in British Columbia, 2019-2021.
- We can build strong relationships with partners that can be used to drive strategy activation (communities, regions, sectors, Presidents Club, area champions etc.)
- New federal legislation (C-81) has now passed; the BC Provincial Government has launched a series of public consultations to develop complementary provincial legislation.
